Stabilization of difluoromethylornithine-induced ornithine decarboxylase inhibition by preincubation with 4-methylene-oxphenol. Incubation of difluoromethylornithine (DFMO)-inhibited rat liver polyamine oxidase with 4-methylene-oxphenol caused a time-dependent restoration of enzyme activity. The restoration of enzyme activity was half maximal when the rate of restoration was measured at 60 min after the addition of the cofactor, ascorbate. The effect was not reversed by addition of oxidized glutathione. The increased enzyme activity was accompanied by a time-dependent decrease in enzyme inhibition, and the time course of restoration of enzyme activity was similar to that of enzyme inhibition. The half-maximum restoration of enzyme activity was obtained at about 20-50 microM 4-methylene-oxphenol and decreased to half of the maximum with 150 microM 4-methylene-oxphenol. These results suggest that 4-methylene-oxphenol acts as a prooxidant, which restores enzyme activity by reducing the extent of enzyme inhibition.
