The brief asserts that when two separate companies occupy adjacent lots in one-family residential districts, the companies may negotiate an agreement to construct a "joint use" driveway at the edge of their lots and locate their respective parking lots to the side of that driveway, even if the two lots do not abut. The brief also says that a "joint use" driveway may be permitted to connect two lots owned by different parties located in one-family residential districts, where those lots are otherwise separated by a corridor abutting their properties' frontages on a public street. And the brief notes that a driveway may be designed to provide access for the use and benefit of the lots, including both parking and delivery of services to one or more other structures on adjacent properties.
