cd autodata v3.31 srpski download 75 A new dual-core processor built on the same semiconductor process as Apple's A4 chip, the Nvidia Tegra 2, is expected to be used in Motorola's Droid X smartphone. The chip is built using a 40nm process, and is designed to be "the most energy-efficient," Android-ready mobile processor currently on the market, according to Nvidia's Nicko van der Meel. The move follows a similar development for the iPhone 3GS, which is expected to use the older A3 chip. However, no details of the chip's performance have yet been released. The new processor is expected to bring Android 2.2 to the Droid X, and is expected to be the first of several upcoming Motorola models to be made with Tegra 2. The first will be the Droid Bionic, and is likely to be announced at the Consumer Electronics Show next month, as an addition to the current line of Droids. The Tegra 2 and G2 chips are expected to hit the market around the Fall, and will likely be used in second-generation Nexus smartphones, due for release around the same time. The Nexus One, with its Nvidia/NVIDIA T-ray imaging technology, and the Motorola Droid 2, with its "second generation" graphics, are expected to be in that lineup as well. The Tegra 2 is the first dual-core, Cortex A9 processor to hit the market, according to Nvidia. ** * Licensed to the Apache Software Foundation (ASF) under one * or more contributor license agreements.
