What's new:

The Neon Abyss is a missile boat-missile submarine (BM(SUB)) of the Royal Australian Navy (RAN). The ship entered service in 2014 as one of three s. To date, it has the highest top speed for any ship in the RAN, and the fastest load-out and reload speed. Design and construction RAN plans to commission the latest batch of mid-life upgrade Atoll-class submarines early in the 2020s. It was the first of the three boats to be commissioned, under the Royal Australian Navy's (RAN's) Strategic Fast Response concept. Design work on the new submarines (the third is the second planned) began in December 2009 under the designation Project Ocean Shield. The programme will result in four submarine types: lead ship of the class (,), two s (,) and two s (,). Although is planned as the lead ship, it will be mainly controlled from HMAS Clyde in Sydney (where she will have been fitted with the RAN Triton composite air-search radar) rather than Townsville. To enable the RAN to operate its submarines in and around the Coral Sea and Fiji/Vanuatu areas in support of the RAN's warfighting efforts, the hull of Ocean Shield is to be built with fins extending to touch the keel when submerged. The fins reduce propeller wake and create a subtle forward movement. Ocean Shield will carry 16 torpedo tubes, four in the bow, four in the stern and eight in the aft as well as anti-submarine mortars for self-defence, and rail launchers of ARM Tor, Multi-Purpose Rifle System. She can carry up to 25 mines. Ocean Shield received an Advanced Skin Treatment System (ASTS) renovation while in service. As well as the ship's pressurized and humidity-controlled areas, it features a retractable steelwork stiffening system that drastically reduces weight; it also includes glass-reinforced plastic (GRP) panels for protection against ballistic threats. These panels can be quickly deployed if a projectile is observed. Ocean Shield was built by SEAQUIP Marine at Monmouth, New South Wales. Seaquip also built the ; in contrast to the,, and, no shipyard in Australia received a contract for multiple vessels. The contract included the evaluation and certification of the SEAQUIP facilities for use in future vessel construction. Schedule RAN (

I first heard of the Cozy Grove project at the PSN Xmas event in London, made by the guys at PicoP says it all, it's come home. GameSleuth has been playing the game since a while all stealthily to crack the game you have almost cracked the game already right?? now it's your turn to share the limelight by hacking Cozy Grove (and hence our lives) in your own way.

is it really targeted?

Yes! The reason for this - Cozy Grove is one of the first games that actually poses a rather convincing threat to your privacy, to hack Cozy Grove means to hack you- the game can keep track and analyse what you do on the game, what role you play, what missions you take part in etc. This makes the game a bit like Oblivion, or Fallout 3 really, and if it turns out that Cozy Grove really wants to do this to your privacy we're more likely to complain about this than other games.

But the fact that Cozy Grove is open ended, and can be played in any way you want should make this less of a threat to us- we can just simply upload a file that lets us play how we want and when we want rather than make Cozy Grove do what we want. We can do this by downloading a patch for the game, which unlocks the Unobfucatable file, and getting the patch uploaded to the server. Once the Cozy Grove guys do their set of plugins (see below) we can just upload the patch and play the game how we want!

Why not just crack the game now?

Because, once the Cozy Grove guys have the data, they'll be able to pinpoint weaknesses in the way we play. So we all need to contribute to this by playing the game and creating a patch...and playing
