Windows Phone users are starting to feel the heat at the hands of Nokia fans, who have taken to social networking sites such as Facebook to vent their frustration. After Nokia announced it was cutting jobs, many Windows Phone users were left a little bit underwhelmed. Sure, they knew it was coming, but that didn't make the news any less bitter. But the news about the jobs cuts didn't hit the Facebook wall just yet. News of the layoffs didn't seem to garner much reaction from Nokia fans on Facebook until about an hour later, when a page called 'We Are Nokia' posted the following: "We at Nokia Mobile are committed to providing one of the best devices and services for our customers. Unfortunately, we have some personnel changes to announce. We apologize for the inconvenience. There has never been a more exciting time to be part of the Nokia team. The Nokia team that remains will continue to deliver an innovative range of devices, services, and entertainment options to our customers. We will evolve and share our expertise to shape the smartphone experience for the future." The page then posted screenshots that it said were from Windows Phone developer forums. The images apparently show that Nokia will be reducing the number of regional support offices and will be concentrating support into only four new global offices. The job cuts are being executed by Nokia's new VP of Product Development, Qi Lu, who was one of the key employees responsible for Windows Phone 7 Mango and is also a noted proponent of the Android platform. The developer forum images also reveal that Nokia is cutting down on the size of its application teams, from approximately 1,000 to around 400. Read more about Nokia's plans for Windows Phone
