The complex formation between the light-harvesting LH1-RC complex and the reaction centre-derived phycocyanobilin tetrapyrrole has been examined in a number of mutants in which various L and M subunits have been replaced with their homologues from the chlorosome of Chloroflexus aurantiacus. The LH1-RC complex was purified from a mutant L89K35M-1M as a phycocyanobilin-bound pigment-protein complex, whose absorption and fluorescence properties were almost identical to those of the wild type. The L and M subunits in both LH1-RC complexes have little effect on pigment-protein complex formation, while the major effect is on the stability of the complex. It was found that the binding affinity of the wild type was lower than that of the L89K35M-1M, whereas the mutant with the substitution of L89 with the homologue from Chloroflexus aurantiacus (L89C.a), formed complexes with a binding affinity comparable with that of the wild type. These results suggest that the side-chain of L89 is not involved in the complex formation. It is most likely that a specific interaction between the pyrrole ring of LH1 and the C-ring of phycoc
