I've seen there are CSS3 property: background-size background-repeat background-position background-color But I can't find what to use them into HTML tags. A: The key to finding these are the respective vendor prefixes. E.g. background-position is the property you're looking for. For background-size, you'd use background-size: cover; For background-repeat, you'd use background-repeat: no-repeat; Likewise for background-color and background-position. To put this in context, background-color and background-position are applied to the background element of a tag, and background-size is applied to the background-size attribute of a tag. It is a good practice to use style sheets rather than inline styling, as you can easily override inline styles. /* boost random/distributions.hpp header file  Copyright Steven Watanabe 2011 * Distributed under the Boost Software License, Version 1.0.
