and we began to really focus on the idea of what we called service learning, and the idea was that we were going to help people help themselves and we were going to be people that people could come to for help, and that has turned into what we call the service journey, and the service journey is really service learning with the added element that we are a university and that in a university, we should be teaching people how to teach themselves, and we began to teach them how to teach themselves, through the idea of the service journey, and then we began to make the change in the way that we looked at being a university, we had this moment of turning the entire institution outward, and we had this idea of a service journey, and we are going to do all of these things and we are going to try to make sure that we get the kind of results that we are going to need to have, but we also believe that we are going to need to have some kind of a return on the investment that the faculty make in the students, and we are committed to being able to help the students to figure out how they are going to get to the kind of skills and knowledge that they need in order to get back on their feet and to take responsibility for their own lives, and so we're committed to that as a university and as a community as well. the novel the eighth book of sabina raheem's magical kushinagar (2016) is a good example of the kind of cultural content we look for in our dissertation work. it is a story about the unfulfilled love of a 20-something and a 60-something in an indian village. this novel challenges the conventional understanding of the end of love. it takes place in the lucknow area of uttar pradesh, where many of the residents are from out of town and speak hindi rather than urdu. the novel, which is in hindi, was published by virasat books, a publishing company that specializes in fiction, and translated into english by sushama dixit.
